Headline:
Sunny spells before turning cold and unsettled later Sunday.

Today:
Early cloud clears away into the daytime to leave a dry day with plenty of sunshine. Mainly light winds, although breezier along the coast, and with temperatures returning to average, though staying warm in the far south. Maximum temperature 17 deg C (63 deg F).

Tonight:
With mostly clear skies across the country and winds easing the night will turn cold, leading to a frost in some spots by dawn. Minimum temperature 0 deg C (32 deg F).

Friday:
A dry day with clear skies and plenty of sunshine, though the odd patch of cloud is still possible. Temperatures around average for the time of year. Maximum temperature 10 deg C (50 deg F).

Outlook for Saturday to Monday:
Bright and fine Saturday, with overnight frost and fog. Then turning unsettled later on Sunday and Monday with showers and cold temperatures moving in southwards, turning wintry at times.
